Stainless Steel (SS 304): Fireproof and highly corrosion-resistant, often used in industrial or high-risk environments; prices are at the higher end of the spectrum. Design Variations: Ladder-style trays, perforated trays, and wire mesh trays may affect pricing due to manufacturing complexity and ventilation features.

Additional Considerations

Installation Costs: Fast assembly designs reduce labor costs, but complex routing or high-load applications may require additional support hardware. Compliance and Safety: Fire-rated coatings, grounding, and proper cable segregation are essential for safety and may influence overall project cost. Supplier Options: Major suppliers include Alibaba, Eurostrut, and regional distributors, offering both retail and bulk pricing options.

Summary

For budgeting purposes, expect standard double-channel cable trays to cost between $1. 20 and $7. 83 per unit, with higher prices for stainless steel, specialized designs, or bulk orders.

Always consider material, tray length, fittings, and installation requirements when calculating total project costs. Proper selection ensures durability, safety, and efficient cable management in industrial, commercial, or data center environments.
