Overview

A distribution box (DB box), also known as a consumer or cable distribution box, is a central hub for distributing electrical power to multiple circuits. It houses components like circuit breakers, switches, busbars, and wiring connections, protecting electrical systems from overloads, short circuits, and other hazards while ensuring organized power distribution. Types and MaterialsPlastic/Fiber Boxes: Lightweight, corrosion-resistant, and non-conductive, ideal for residential or small office setups.

They are often surface-mounted and provide basic protection against moisture and dust. Metal Boxes: Robust and durable, suitable for industrial or high-demand commercial environments. They offer impact resistance, high load-bearing capacity, and enhanced protection against physical damage.

Examples include Himel HDPZ50 Surface Metal Box. Waterproof Boxes: Designed to meet IEC-493-1 standards, these boxes protect against water and dust, making them suitable for outdoor or harsh environments.
